

Design/NOTES

Wolf Architects first consulted with the Longyear Museum in 2007 to provide master planning and studies for two of the Museum's properties. We then designed an initial round of renovations, restoration and accessibility improvements at the historic, 8-acre Mary Baker Eddy estate in Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, with its main house originally designed by Peabody and Stearns and subsequently expanded by Chicago-architect Solon Beman. The Massachusetts Cultural Facility Fund provided a grant to help fund that project.

Now we are pleased to be completing plans for a major, facility-wide transformation, with designs for new spaces for visitor services; new building systems throughout both historic structures; exterior and interior restoration; additional accessibility upgrades; and significant landscape and site improvements. Our continuing collaboration with Longyear's professional staff and trustees, and with an expert team of consultants, has been an honor!
